ECONOMISTS for PEACE & SECURITY

Peace is not a relationship of nations. It is a condition of mind brought about by a serenity of soul. Peace is not merely the absence of war. It is also a state of mind. Lasting peace can come only to peaceful people.

The Economics of Peace and Security Journal, Volume 10, Number 2 (October 2015)

In addition to a four-article symposium on Afghanistan, this issue contains three stand-alone articles. The first two, respectively by Charles H. Anderton and by Sebastian Ille and Dina Mansour, both construct evolutionary game theory models to study the social evolution of violence and potential levers for intervention and the creation of peaceful environments. The third, by Uih Ran Lee, discusses the creation and application of a new dataset on the intentional targeting of civilians in war. The symposium on field research in Afghanistan is introduced by guest editor Travers B. Child and contains articles by Daniel Karrel, Greg Adams, Jan Koehler, Kristof Gosztonyi, Keith Child, and Basir Feda, and James Weir and Hekmatullah Azamy.

Tunisian National Dialogue Quartet awarded Nobel Peace Prize

The Norwegian Nobel Committee

The Norwegian Nobel Committee has decided that the Nobel Peace Prize for 2015 is to be awarded to the Tunisian National Dialogue Quartet for its decisive contribution to the building of a pluralistic democracy in Tunisia in the wake of the Jasmine Revolution of 2011. The Quartet was formed in the summer of 2013 when the democratization process was in danger of collapsing as a result of political assassinations and widespread social unrest. It established an alternative, peaceful political process at a time when the country was on the brink of civil war. It was thus instrumental in enabling Tunisia, in the space of a few years, to establish a constitutional system of government guaranteeing fundamental rights for the entire population, irrespective of gender, political conviction or religious belief.

El Niño and the Case for Microgrids

By The American Security Project, October 8, 2015

This is a post from Andrew Landrum, a current Juris Doctor candidate in University of Richmond School of Law. He presents the case of Microgrids in El Niño, which could be able to generate and store electricity for use independent of the traditional national grid in such extreme weather events.

Winter is coming to the United States' national electric grid. El Niño - an ocean temperature event that affects global weather - is on its way and is expected to be one of the strongest events in recent history. Already, we have seen El Niño's warmer ocean currents create severe weather conditions, causing blackouts throughout the Asian and Pacific regional energy grids. Experts have expressed similar fears that such extreme weather events might spell danger for the United States' energy grid. These and other events revive the necessary conversation regarding the resiliency of our bulk-power system. The United States should consider supporting distributed energy policies, specifically microgrids, to guard against future strains on the nation's ageing energy infrastructure.

Securing our grid means ensuring continued and unfettered access to electricity. Threats to access continue to evolve, but can be grouped into the following categories: natural events, such as El Niño and falling tree branches; terrorist attacks, including physical or cyber attacks; and an electromagnetic pulse, potentially generated by a low-orbit detonation of a nuclear bomb, resulting in rolling blackouts foreseeably lasting for months, or even years. Weather events are likely to become more frequent as a result of climate change. And, while a terrorist attack or EMP seems like science-fiction, the threats are real enough to alarm key administrators former-Chair of the Central Intelligence Agency, Jim Woosley, and former-Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, John Wellinghoff.

Surging Seas

Sea level rise analysis by Climate Central

Global warming has raised global sea level about 8 inches since 1880, and the rate of rise is accelerating. Rising seas dramatically increase the odds of damaging floods from storm surges. A Climate Central analysis finds the odds of "century" or worse floods occurring by 2030 are on track to double or more, over widespread areas of the U.S. These increases threaten an enormous amount of damage. Across the country, nearly 5 million people live in 2.6 million homes at less than 4 feet above high tide – a level lower than the century flood line for most locations analyzed. And compounding this risk, scientists expect roughly 2 to 7 more feet of sea level rise this century – a lot depending upon how much more heat-trapping pollution humanity puts into the sky.

Search or navigate our interactive tools above to see maps of areas below different amounts of sea level rise and flooding, down to neighborhood scale, matched with area timelines of risk. The tool also provides statistics of population, homes and land affected by city, county and state, plus links to factsheets, data downloads, action plans, embeddable widgets, and more.

Funding & Employment Opportunities

Director, Inclusive Economies

The Ford Foundation, New York, NY

The Ford Foundation seeks a dynamic and creative leader and strategist for this newly created senior management position, directing one of the seven thematic areas that will define our programming. Reporting to one of the three Program Vice Presidents, the Director will be responsible for overseeing the two lines of work that will define this thematic area, supported by a team of grant makers and a program investment officer. Additionally, the Director will be responsible for managing key support staff (program associates, financial analyst, program assistants and department coordinator) who are based in this thematic area.

The Foundation's overall aim is to disrupt the drivers of inequality via seven (7) mutually reinforcing thematic areas of programming: Civic Engagement and Government; Creativity and Free Expression; Equitable Development; Gender, Racial and Ethnic Justice; Inclusive Economies; Internet Freedom; and Youth Opportunity and Learning. Inclusive Economies will work through government, business, and civil society to help create economies that are fair, accountable, and provide broadly shared prosperity and opportunity. The foundation has defined these seven areas through an intensive strategic planning process, now giving directors and their teams significant room to shape specific programming priorities and approaches.

Assistant Professor, Human Dimensions of Global Change

Boston University, College of Arts & Sciences, Department of Earth & Environment

The Department of Earth & Environment invites applicants for a tenure-track assistant professor position focusing on the nexus of human activity and global change, beginning on July 1, 2016. We seek a social scientist whose research and teaching apply theory and methods to enhance understanding of the coupling between human and natural systems typified by the energy-water-land nexus and the climate-water-agriculture nexus. Our interest is in scholars who are rigorously quantitative and who can integrate additional qualitative or mixed-methods approaches into their research. We are particularly looking for demonstrated potential for interdisciplinary collaboration—particularly with natural scientists—and complementarity with the department's strengths in energy and environmental analysis, integrated assessment modeling, remote sensing and GIS, and biogeosciences.

Action Corner

Gambling With Natural Gas: Will Your State Play Its Cards Right?

The fuels your state uses to generate electricity can make a big difference in your electric bill, and what that bill will look like in the future will depend a lot on where you live. Why? The electricity sector has already begun shifting away from dirty coal-fired power plants to cleaner-burning natural gas, plus renewable energy like wind and solar power. This shift will accelerate now that states and utilities must lower their heat-trapping emissions almost a third by 2030 under the new federal Clean Power Plan. The decisions your governor makes over the next few years could impact your state's energy future for decades to come—and your pocketbook as well.

While natural gas has a potential role to play in our energy transition, too much natural gas—itsself a fossil fuel—can be a problem. New Union of Concerned Scientists analysis shows that consumers in two-thirds of US states may be at financial risk because of an overreliance on natural gas.
